Intellectual Freedom in Crisis: Moral Panics, Censorship, and the Cost to Library Workers

OVERVIEW

This webinar examines the current landscape of attacks on intellectual freedom and the impacts of coordinated censorship campaigns. We'll analyze the role of moral entrepreneurs, including organized advocacy groups and bad faith social media auditors/influencers.

We'll explore the historical context of how moral panics operate to limit access to reading materials and confine intellectual freedom. We look at moral panics over three centuries: penny dreadfuls in 19th century England, comics censorship in 20th century US and Canada, and our current crisis. Understanding this history helps us respond more effectively in today's environment. It also provides perspective on the life cycle of moral panics.

The webinar covers legal threats facing libraries, including new state laws in Idaho, Missouri, Louisiana, and other states.

Finally, we'll address the human cost of this crisis: the occupational trauma and burnout facing library workers, including the impact of anticipatory anxiety and the disproportionate impact on marginalized staff.

LEARNING AGENDA

1. Understand the current landscape of intellectual freedom challenges
2. Analyze the mechanisms of coordinated censorship campaigns
3. Compare how moral panics have operated to censor materials across four historical periods
4. Recognize the symptoms of occupational burnout and trauma faced by library staff.
